

If AFSCME Local 590 organizers and supporters aren't talking with some of the staff they want to unionize now, how will they treat you if the union wins the election?

Will the union still ignore some staff ... but expect all staff to pay union dues/fees?

Will the union involve you in decision making about bargaining priorities or who would be your union steward (one of your co-workers who would be your day-to-day voice on your concerns)?

Will the union use your dues/fees to support political candidates or issues that don't align with your personal values?

The union isn't treating people equally now when it's trying to convince staff to join the union. Why would that change if it is elected?

Unsure about a union? Vote NO.
